Prose is one of the two major forms of literary expression, the other being poetry. If asked to distinguish between prose and poetry, one could say prose is like walking, that is to say, it is functional, while poetry is like dancing, which is decorative or ornamental. Prose is the medium that is regularly used in spoken language, letters, articles, newspapers and short stories. The word 'prose' is derived from the Latin 'prosa', meaning straightforward. It is thus direct and plain form of language that is used in everyday communication.

There are several artistic manifestations of prose too. Generally, a prose writer does not make use of rhyme and metre, which are the chief characteristics of poetry. This is not to say that prose cannot be artistic and pleasing. A skilful writer makes use of several devices like puns, paradox, alliteration, metaphors and many other rhetorical forms to adorn his or her work. Again there are no prescribed style for writing prose. There are as many styles as there are writers and these may range from the most simple to the very complex.
